Our “Life-Saving Rules”

At Eagle Mine we have established a safety culture that is resolute in achieving Zero Harm. As part of that culture, we’ve developed ten ‘Life-Saving Rules’ which have been implemented to protect each of us and the operation from our greatest risks of injury and damage.

We always adhere to the following:

Always wear seatbelts when operating or riding in vehicles and mobile equipment.

Never use a mobile phone when operating a vehicle or mobile equipment.

Always isolate equipment and apply lockout-tagout protection before performing work.

Only use equipment that is safe and that we’re trained and qualified to operate.

Never disable, defeat, or bypass safety devices, limit switches or alarms.

Only enter confined spaces after first making them safe and obtaining an entry permit.

Never work or cross under a suspended load or operating lift basket.

Always wear fall protection or use fall prevention measures when exposed to fall hazards.

Never work under unsupported ground.

Always report to work free from the influence of drugs or alcohol.

Violation of a ‘Life-Saving Rule’ can result in disciplinary action including removal from site and termination.
